Chris Bacchus

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like - as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like - as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like - as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Joe Beausoleil

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Gurchan Birdi

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Orlena Chan

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Mag Ciemiega

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Michael Cirillo

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty—seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty—seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty—seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty—seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty—seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty—seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Andrew Clanahan

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Tiffany Delve

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Piotr Dymura

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Nik Firka

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Todd Haskins

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Andrew Hodge

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyzO123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Scott Krysa

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters plus period, apostrophe and ampersand to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters plus period, apostrophe and ampersand to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters plus period, apostrophe and ampersand to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Michael Lao

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Andrea Luis

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, fgures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, fgures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, fgures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Daniel Marcus

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Dan Mitchell

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty–seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty–seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty–seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty–seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty–seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty–seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Michael Neto

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Alex Plociennik

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Cornelius Quiring

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Darren Ray

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Jackie Saik

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In   , twenty-seven Humber College students

In   , twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In   , twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In   , twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of   .

In   , twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of   .

In   , twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of   .

Nick Seeger

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like – as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like – as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like – as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Katie Short

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

David Spindler

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like—as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Craig Steffan

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like— as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like— as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like— as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

Danny Wu

abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz 0123456789
ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like-as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like-as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.

In 2009, twenty-seven Humber College students each designed a font based on the iconic lettering of the Toronto Transit Commission subway system. With only 26 upper case letters (plus period, apostrophe and ampersand) to refer to, they were free to interpret what the lower case, figures, and other characters in the typeface should look like-as long as their work harmonized with the original, anonymously designed capitals of 1954.