My Dear Friend,

I thought you might care to see the enclosed specimen of your penmanship. It is one of your efforts while you were a student in the little school house where I taught. I taught there during the winter of 1879-80 and a part of the next winter. I also have an autograph album which you boys gave me for a Christmas present. In it you have an eagle similar to this one. On the first page in your hand, and close in red ink is this inscription:

The pen the mind’s material giver,
Moves millions by its will,
For, from its life, flows many a shower
Of thought that drops sure to thrill.

On each and every page of white,
The lines both smooth and graceful,
The pen may leave, while in its flight,
Thoughts of the truly grateful.
Tis not by tongue alone we hear
The workings of the inner mind,
But through the pen so still, so clear
The thoughts and images we find.

Permit thy thoughts in inks dark lines
When passion owns thy reason,
But write thou that which never maligns
True loyalty, not treason.
